

Tiny Goodbread Is In Russwood Camp

Chick Right, Under Shows Up After Having Been on Missing List for Over a Week—Has Been Spending Winter at His Home in Mayo, Fla.—Is Ready to Get Started.

BY BOB PIGUE.

Tiny Goodbread, one of the biggest pitchers in baseball, who served with the Tribe last season, reported to Manager John J. McCloskey of the Chicks at Russwood park Thursday morning. Tiny came from his home in Mayo, Fla., where he has been wintering. The big pitcher-comedian appeared as big as a mountain, but said he was in good condition, and that it would require but a few days to fit him for the opening of the season. Goodbread is a right-handed pitcher, who formerly dabbled with the spitball, but who says he can get by without it this season, as it has been outlawed.

Dazy Vance, another right-hander, is the only other Chick outside the fold. Vance is expected to show up at any time.

TINY READY FOR WORK.

Goodbread has been wintering at his home in Mayo, Fla., where it is summer practically all the year round, and since spring opened up he has been tinkering with a baseball and getting the accumulated kinks out of his pitching arm. Goodbread is being welcomed on as one of the Chicks regulars this season.

Last year Goodbread used the spitball to a considerable extent, but since last season the Southern league magnates have barred the wet delivery, so it is up to Goodbread to get by without it. It was at first believed by the Chick officials that Goodbread would have to be paid or traded over to the team, but Tiny chimed in with the information that the spitball was not all he was capable of in his pitching repertoire, and asked a chance to show that he could still pitch effectively ball without calling on the moist delivery.

Tiny possesses a good curve ball, and quite a few other requisites of a successful right-hander. He is going to be there minus the spitball, but says he has no fear that he will be able to get by, and do some effective work for the Tribe on the mound this season.

Goodbread is a comedian and last year he was the chief funmaker of the Tribe. He kept the stands laughing all the time by his antics and fondness generally will be glad the big boy is back again.

THREE BIG PITCHERS.

The arrival of Goodbread rounds out the Chicks' big three—Goodbread, Vance and Vance. All three pitchers are right-handers and are over six feet tall and weigh over 300 pounds. With this trio of dealers in the rotation, the Chicks should be able to pitch at least half the batters to death.

Goodbread is a veteran, and has been pitching for many years. He has had his fling under the big top, and is now content to wind up his days as a minor leaguer.

Dazy Vance, the only other missing Tribe member, is coming from his home in Nebraska.

RAIN HALTS TRIBE.

The Chicks are loading and letting the rain gods do the work Thursday, due to a downpour early Thursday which soaked the playing field at Russwood.

Two periods of work will be indulged in Friday, and on Saturday afternoon the Chicks will again meet the Polaris, a local senior ball club, at Russwood beginning at 2:30 o'clock.

RECRUIT DROP POOR, ACCORDING TO LARRY SITON

Scout Declares That Big Scar-city Exists and Youngsters Needed to Replace Aging Stars.

NEW YORK, March 25.—The scarcity of young ball players who may be able to take the place of many fast-fading stars is one of the most serious problems confronting major league club owners today, according to Larry Sifton, veteran Brooklyn scout.

"Talentful youngsters were never more scarce than they are this year," said Sifton today, "and there is no indication that the 1932 crop will develop many of exceptional value."

The discovery of a phenom or two may be expected, but this type of player seldom lives up to expectations. Youngsters develop in lots of natural ability, however, are few and far between. They are simply not being developed as fast as in former years.

"The Federal league and the world war dealt baseball some hard knocks and forced many minor leaguers to the wall while most of the youngsters went into the service. The minor leaguers are just making a new start, but the players they develop will hardly be ready for first company for several years."

"I've been watching the situation for a long time, and I've seen the problem grow bigger each year. Why, out of 200 players who are placed on the list who came up to the majors between 1915 and 1918, I had been watching only three made good. That is a mighty discouraging percentage."

Lack Confidence.

"A majority of the youngsters these days seem to lack confidence. I've found this particularly true with college players, though I can offer no plausible reason for it. They've simply got to start growing good young players, but all over again, otherwise the class of baseball in the major leagues will suffer."

Sifton decries the lack of young players of the types represented by Durober, Wheat, Cuthaw, Stengel, Cagere, McCarthy, Pfeffer, Myers and Sherry Smith, all of whom he brought to Brooklyn from the sand lot. And he asserted that the average baseball fan would be surprised if he should be told the real ages of many players in the game today.

The veteran scout claims the demand made by the St. Paul club for the title to Outfielder Elmer Miller as evidence of the high valuation placed on players today. St. Paul, he declared, wants $12,500 and two players for Miller's release. Several major league clubs are after the player.

Wednesday night's game in the basketball series, senior division, brought out a goodly sized crowd and when play started, C. M. C. A. had a 2-0 lead. A second had practically clinched the city title by defeating Y. M. J. C. in one of the fastest games of the season.

In the opener C. M. C. A. defeated the Flying Squadron, 22-16, and, as the score indicates, the Flyers were completely outclassed. Making the score, the Flyers played above his opponent and was able to place the ball at will to any of his men, who soon proved that practice was even more than theory.

The real game of the evening, and which practically decided the city title, was between Y. M. C. A. and Y. M. J. C. A. Seconds.

Close studies of basketball had figured the contest as a close one, and the counter little opposition in the title series, but the game was badly spoiled, for the contest was in doubt until the last five minutes of play.

Good Hitters Scarce In Stallings' Crew

"Miracle Man's" Team Will Have Fair Speed, But Lacks Driving Power at Bat—Few Promising Recruits in Camp

NEW YORK, March 25.—George Stallings left his position fields and his prize stock at Haddock, Ga., a fortnight ago and hopped a choo choo for Columbus, same state—to take charge of the Boston Braves and rookies of the 1932 regulars.

After two weeks of vigorous spring training at Columbus, the erstwhile "Miracle Man" probably has a pretty good idea of who's who among his ball players, and next Tuesday he will watch them perform in the first exhibition game of the season against Joe Tinker's Columbus Senators at Atlanta.

Stallings expects to whip his team into the proverbial pink in his long series against the Detroit Tigers.

Just what the lineup of the Braves will be when the bell rings in the National league is a matter for conjecture right now. But that it will not vary greatly from that of 1919 seems reasonable.

Playing talent has been as scarce as radium since the baseball mags discovered last summer that the grand old game had really performed a remarkable comeback, and like many another manager, Stallings found it impossible to cook up a line that would greatly enhance the chances of the Boston outfit for the 1920 campaign.

The Braves, quite a few of youngsters to Columbus and out of this flock it is probable that Stallings may decide on one or two rookies as fourth while prospects. That remains to be seen.

The names of the players who will be depended on to raise Boston above its sixth place finish of 1921, however, are familiar to the Braves.

Walter Holke, who succeeded the veteran Ed Konetchy as Boston's regular first sacker, will be back on the job again this year. The rest of the infield will probably look just as familiar.

Johnny Gossett, who was picked, probably the former, will start the season at second base.

Habit Maranville, who has held rank as one of the best shortstops in baseball for a number of years, will perform in the short grass once again, and Norman Vasek, a good pitcher, will be back in mid-season last year, will be stationed at the hot corner. This combination, however, is a long shot.

Boedel, cannot be rated as the best infield aggregation in the National league, at least for the present. He is the best sacker. He hit .332 last season, but in the past has been an in-and-out batsman. The rest of the Braves infielders, including Maranville, are classed with the 250 clubbers.

Just what the complexion of the outfield will be is uncertain, though in all probability Leslie Mann, Ray Powell and Walter Druze will be the regular gardeners. Percy Carroll is probably the best of the recruit outfielders on Boston's roster. He is 25 years of age with the Braves last season and hit .265. Stallings also has L. R. Christensen, Tommy Miller, Gene Bailey, John L. Sullivan and Eddie Eaves. Eaves was formerly a Brown university star and for the last two years was manager and outfielder for the Providence club.

Billings, Rudolph, Oeschger, Hearn and many others are the regular pitching staff. Johnny Scott, Hugh McQuillen and Johnny Jones are hold-over second string pitchers from last season, and the Braves have several raw recruits whose chances are slim of landing regular mounds.

With Holke rated as the best hitter on the team, and the players who will probably be counted on to play regularly in the outer garden ranging no better than .250 hitters, the batting strength of the Braves will not be astonishing. Stallings will have a club with fairly good speed both in fielding and on the bases.

The pitchers, with Rudolph alone ranking as a star who has stood the acid test, do not figure to burn up the league. Yet Stallings is a resourceful manager who gets the most out of his players as a rule, and his feat of bringing the 1914 Braves from last place in mid-season and winning a pennant with them has not been forgotten. Texas Tate, of Hot Springs, Takes on Joe White, the Latest Raggio Hope—Neither Is a Champion, But Both Can Punch—Tate Plans to Behead White.

BY COYLE SHEA.

Heavyweights feature the main event of the weekly card at the Southern A. C. Monday night, when Texas Tate, of Hot Springs, takes on the latest Raggio hope, Joe White. They have a displacement of something like 205 pounds and carry a battery of two 14-inch guns.

Neither is billed as a champion (unlike Slick Heimann's introductory speech is concluded), but both are said to be there with the wallop that counts. Moreover, in their training stunts they have shown that they have the disposition to step and the ability to take.

White, the local entry, has been groomed for several months by Raggio before being sent out before the home fans. He is boxing daily with Battling Gabe and is putting forth from fight to fight rounds of real fighting in the ring. At the finish both are ready for the show.

TATE LOOKS GOOD.

Tate has been showing up exceedingly well, and is hardly able to pass the time in peace. He is on his toes for the Monday night battle, and means to start pegging right crosses from the opening bell.

After his workout Wednesday he told Billy Haack that he would properly prepare White for the undertaker. "I never felt better in my life," he said, "and I intend stopping White as soon as I can."

Promoter Haack is not advertising the match as a championship affair, but has offered the sketch as a rattling good contest between slugging heavies.

The rest of the card will bring together: Rusty Kid vs. Kid Sweet; Willie Pure vs. Kid Ching; Battling Hart vs. Jack Draper, and a battle royal will start it off.

By every twist of the elastic dope he should be champion of the A. B. F. and of the colored race. Is there any other answer at hand?

Superstition plays a big part in the life of Roux, as it does with other warriors of a dusky hue. If he is mentioned in the press as being a champion, he is likely to inspect matters for the first four rounds before he dived ahead at the evening's assignment.

In any event he displayed his right to belong to the select when he outpointed Game Monday night in one of the most spectacular bouts of all time. If there is anyone who can deny him admittance to king's colony after Monday night's battle, kindly permit him to step forth.

Roux is in a similar fix with Pat Moore, who has slugged two bantam-weight champions, but is still a contender for the throne.

Moore defeated Kid Williams when the Baltimore Bearcat was at his best, and the has outpointed Pete Herman on one occasion.

The rule permitting no-decision bouts has been the main obstacle in the way of other good entries, however.

Title holders are allowed to retain their place despite any defeat, provided they are victorious in the next bout.
